Yes I agree, it's a bit of an inadequate progression if in reality all they've done is lose their cherished ESA status and be forced onto UC, which is about the only time I ever see it happen, outside of a fab job outcome!

Yes! Thats exactly it - appropriate evidence to prove this is listed in the handbook. Often projects think still being inactive but looking for a job is the result but it's the change in economic status we look for [REDACTED]).

I spoke to [REDACTED] about this the other day - we understand that moving from ESA to [REDACTED] (to use old money) is maybe not in everyone's best interest so if we see this result its normally the inactive into employment or not claiming benefits to moving into benefits.

thanks

I know!

A simpler question - when we talk about "inactive" participants, does that encompass those who are on no benefit, and/or on a non-job seeking benefit ie ESA, Income Support etc? And if so, to move them into "job search" would imply a change of benefit status, ie a move to UC or to a job?

Thank you!

Firstly I think wow what a responsive contract manager!

Secondly, with the caveat this is not my area of expertise, it looks positive to me. I have cc'ed [REDACTED] in for reference and we chat about it when we meet but for now, please progress with including this as your match funding.

Thank you

Hello [REDACTED]

Here's the reply from our partnership manager at the DWP – it does seem to us that their FSF money is “clean” of ESF monies, and is purely UK government funding. (They stipulate that an FSF funded candidate cannot also access ESF funded services, but that is self-evident to us, or we would be double-funding the same individual across two sources, and claiming his outcome twice.)

Other than that, this looks fine to us. What do you think?
