No problem at all

Yeah, tenancy agreement is also acceptable. If the document was dated more than 3 months from the start of support then you would need to obtain additional document confirming that the participant still lives at that address: it could be a self-declaration and/or a justification provided by the project. I'll go through this when we have our Training session on Evolutive and we'll chat about outputs in depth then.

Spoke too soon! Also, for proof of address, is a tenancy agreement valid? It mentions rent card, rent statement, mortgage statement and even a letter from the actual homeowner, but nothing re their own tenancy?

This has taken slightly more time than usual due to staff shortages. As soon as the project is set up on [REDACTED], I'll be able to issue login details and send an invite for a training session. Hope that's okay.

>>

>> In some cases, participants may have evidence such as: ESA or Carer's Allowance that would class them as 'economically inactive'. Those who receive Universal Credit, the easiest way to establish the category of labour regime they fall in is to check their Commitments Page within Journal. If there's no 'work related requirements' then it's safe to assume that they're 'economically inactive'. I have attached some guidance on how to establish if a person is 'economically inactive' when in receipt of UC (Annex 3, p. 56).

>>

>> Some of our projects, ask their participants to ask about their labour regime status via Journal. The work coaches usually respond very quickly and you can take a screenshot of their reply and use it as evidence.

>>

>> In terms of the restrictions around the length or duration of a course to be classed as an outcome, technically there is no restrictions around this, so even a 1-day course would count as a result. The important point to note here is to remember that we need to be able to demonstrate a progression in participant's circumstances. For example, if a participant was already engaged in education and training at the start of the support (let's say they were doing a Level 1 Functional Skills) and your project helped this participant to progress on a higher level, this wouldn't count as a result as there's no 'change in circumstances'. However, if a participant was unemployed and not in education or training at the start of the support and your project has supported them to access education and training with a 3rd party, then you could demonstrate a progression in circumstances = ESF result.

>>

>> I'll go through outputs and evidence required by ESF during our Training Session on [REDACTED]. If you have any more questions, feel free to ask them via email or I'll try my best to answer them during our next meeting. Also, the attached guidance lists all types of preferred evidence for assessing ESF participant eligibility which I always find very useful (Table 2, p.15).

>> And, for a training course to class as an outcome, is there any restriction on the type or duration of the course, as long as it's run by a proper institution? For example, we often put people on a 1-day asbestos course, for a 5-day CSCS card course; would these count?
